For the Mercury

BY W. R. DELANT. 1 ... him in his glory

Rewildered in his bliss. And every joy that earth could give And every smile was his. Mirth spread her wings on the balmy gale, And laughter stifled the voice of wail; But his heart still yearned for something more For a fairer land, for a fairer shore,

Man was not made for this!

I saw him in the battle, His hand was black with gore, And his eye flashed fire as the bickern steel Each beating bosom tore;

And in scenes of slaughter he revelled wild, Like the frantic mother that's lost her child ; But that demon scowl and that bacchanal rage Bring not one glow to the heart of the sage, Man was not made for this !

I saw him court ambition, I saw him mount her car, And blast the earth with his noxious breath

And o'er vanquished worlds he ruled supreme, Like the eagle that dares the day-star's beam ;

But a mighty void still craved in his breast, And wild dreams stole o'er his mighty rest. Man was not made for this! I saw him soar the heavens. And pierce through nature's laws,

And read the secrets of the deep And tell each hidden cause ; But his spirit beat 'gainst its mortal cage And the brightness of each diadem star Only told of a something lovelier far. Man was not made for this!

> I saw him at the altar, In sadness and a'one, And his spirit beat, And his lips were moved In humble orison;

And the thought of his frailties woke a sigh, And the tears of repentance stole to hir eye; And he bowed him down to the holy soil, To ask forgiveness of his God. Oh, man was made for this!

I saw him on his death-bed, No frantic fear was there ; But sereph hope was throned in his heart A. he muttered a last fond prayer.

A crucifix was in his hand-Redeeming pledge of a brighter land-To clasp his dying Savior he tried, And in that effort of love he died. Oh, man was made for this !

Father in Heaven! gently bend To list the cry Thy children send Up to thy Throne ! The language of such voiceless sigh, The lifting of each tearful eye,

To Thee are known, O Thou! upon whose kingly brow Resteth the crown of glory now, Savior Divine !

The rugged road we fainting tread On its most cruel crags is red With blood of Thine! O, aid us, in this darkened hour!

Above us angry tempests hover ; Snaves are beneath; Bleeding, and sick with inward smart, Oppressed with doubt and dread, the heart

Could pray for death ! To lift our load of guilt, was laid On thee a weight of woe, in dread Gethisemane! O. Savior-man! our Brother Priest! To whom shall mourners turn for rest If not to thee?

All blind and helpless would we come To seek in Thee peace, comfort, home; -Our only plea.

Thou did'st the form of mortal wear. Thou did'at the griefs of mortal hear. On Calvary!

Like a generous lady, now and a while;

Mine-my own-without doubts or terms,

With all thy goodness and all thy errors, o me, and to me alone, revealed spring shut up, a fountain sealed ;

mething as much as myself to be, this my soul, which I left to Thee. Flesh of my flesh-bone of my bons-Life of my life-as whom Thou dost make

Two to the world-for the world's word's sake, But each unto each, in Thy sight one.
